Scavolini presents the Gres Experience project

25/02/2015

With Scavolini, now slim thickness Porcelain Stoneware can be used even at the doors.

Scavolini is expanding its range of materials. With the Gres Experience project, it is introducing slim thickness Porcelain Stoneware even as a door finishing material: a striking solution which can now be used, from today, on the LiberaMente and Scenery kitchen programmes.

Ideal for modern kitchens, to which it gives a contemporary - prevalently urban and industrial - approach, Stoneware can also add a touch of style to solutions in more traditional taste.

Slim thickness porcelain stoneware is a ceramic material fired at about 1150/1250°C and cooled to room temperature that provides excellent resistance to cuts, abrasions, water and thermal shock. It is non-deforming and is an exceptionally durable surface, making it ideal for use in kitchens.

It delivers these technical characteristics together with a very attractive appearance. The range of 14 colours offered by Scavolini, combined with the textures of stoneware, are the basis for original mixes of colours and materials, pleasing to the eye and delightful to touch.

What's more, to create a skilful dialogue of spaces, shades, surfaces and functions, the doors can be used alongside porcelain stoneware worktops, from 2 to 6 cm thick: the material's extremely tough scratch-proof surface, which can be washed immediately, is exceptionally safe and hard-wearing.

Scavolini slim thickness porcelain stoneware is currently available on the LiberaMente programme, with the stoneware placed on the door without a frame of any kind, and on Scenery, with the stoneware fitted to the door supported and surrounded by a lightweight aluminium frame:

- In LiberaMente, slim thickness porcelain stoneware is a material that gives added impact to modern taste. Geometrical lines, severity of form and unbeatable flexibility are the main features of this 100% Italian-made programme, designed to offer a solution with vast potential for personalisation and the utmost compositional freedom, and perfectly integrated with the rest of the home.

- Slim thickness porcelain stoneware fits perfectly into the stylistic rigour of Scenery, designed by King&Miranda, with its sophisticated appeal. Conceived to open onto the living area, it is a kitchen made to be lived in and shown off, the stage for family and social relations. A highly functional, absolutely complete programme, intended for people who like the ritual of food preparation and want to share this pleasure with their guests, to make entertaining even more.
